How to describe and Interpret Glass Trade Beads

Accurate and detailed descriptions of beads found at archaeological sites or on ethnographic objects are an absolute necessity if we are to convey useful information to others that will help to classify, interpret, and date them. Inadequate descriptions are of little use to anyone. This presentation will indicate what needs to be recorded and how. Topics covered will include classification, manufacturing techniques, physical traits such as shape, colour, and decoration, with notes on chronology, chemical composition, sourcing, and use.
